THEGAZETTE.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 23.

AN UNEASY MOUNTAIN .- Fiat Rock is a summer resort in the mountains of western North Carolina, where a number of Charles tonians have their summer bomes. For a week or so the colony has been greatly alarmed by the frequence of earthquake shocks. Some have been so severe as to throw lamps from the table and break chica on the shelves. As Flat Rock is in the shadow of Bald Mountain, which about ten years ago was spit open by a convulsion, it has alarmed people in the vicinity. A gentleman who has returned to the city from that locality of the shocks says: "I have spent much time every autumn in ricing all about among the mountains of this region. Baid Mountain is simply a pile of broken rock, being surely and steadily undermined by water. There are all the indications of it. I have heard it saidthat a subterranean river has been sounded or discovered near there. river has been sounded or discovered near Tryon, N. C. Poseibly it is the same which underruns the 'Baid' Now when the rocky ledges that are heaped up with only an inch or two of sup, ort on other rocks worn away by the water great masses of rock and earth fail, driving and compressing the air underneath, which rushes along following the water courses, large and small, until it escapes through weak spots with explosious. The noises heard lately are distinctly different from those heard in the great earthquake of 1887. Then it was a mighty roar, that seemed to fill the earth and air all around; but these shocks have been quick, sharp and decisive—more like the firing of ordnance than authing else, and are observed in different places from time to time.
